High cholesterol plagues so many of us during the rest of the year that it warrants a 4th of July celebration. America's health foundation was at it again. In early July, American Heart Association officials decided to re-launch their New Year's Day "Fast Day" campaign: The American Heart Association announced that its "Fast Day," an annual event encouraging Americans to reduce the amount of fat in their diets and improve their overall health, will return this year. The American Heart Association will encourage people to be "Fast Fit" by exercising regularly and eating foods that do not contain trans fats. The latest version of the campaign, to be launched in early September, will feature an integrated nutrition and physical activity campaign. The announcement came after an executive meeting of the American College of Cardiology and the American College of Physicians concluded that eating trans fat "is associated with an increased risk of cardiovascular disease and death," according to a release. While consuming trans fat has been linked to higher cholesterol levels, they are not the only concerns. According to the Heart Association, the new campaign will include "trans fat-free cooking and shopping tips" and simple ways to get more exercise, such as walking. The association hopes that their efforts will not only inspire healthier habits, but also make Americans more aware of the risks associated with bad eating and physical activity habits. "The 'Fast Day' is a simple, enjoyable way to get people committed to making positive lifestyle choices over the 0cc13bf012
