An anti-choice group is suing Colorado's largest abortion provider, claiming the clinic's plans to move from one building to another in the same medical center violates a state law meant to prevent anti-abortion protesters from intimidating patients. For 10 years, Colorado Right to Life — which consistently scores among the worst in the nation in the annual National Right to Life report card — has waged a legal fight against Planned Parenthood's clinic in Denver. But what it has failed to articulate since receiving its first cease-and-desist order in 2000 is why it believes Planned Parenthood is breaking the law. A citizen group called "Concerned Pro Life Citizens of Denver" (CPLCD) brought suit against Planned Parenthood in August, alleging that Planned Parenthood was violating the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Act and harassing patients for refusing to abort their unborn children. The Colorado statute bans what it calls "unwelcome conduct that is directed toward an individual because of the individual's race, color, religion, ancestry, national origin, sexual orientation, or disability or that is engaged in because of the individual's refusal or failure to abort a fetus." The complaint alleges that Planned Parenthood violated the Act by moving its "Flexible Pricing Services" into the same building as its abortion services. Planned Parenthood's clinic, it says, "is intended to directly compete with the clinic for which the CPLCD operates.” As evidence that the two clinics are planning to start “competing,” the plaintiff points to the fact that “Planned Parenthood is soliciting fetal tissue donations to further their research and development, and would offer on-site services to assist in the development of methods of fetal reduction.” The lawsuit goes further, alleging that Planned Parenthood is using the fact that the Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment permits the sale of fetal tissue to “exert unwanted pressure on CPLCD to cease-and-desist its operation.” Neither CPLCD nor Colorado Right to Life were able to comment on the suit because it is ongoing. But Scott Fischbach, Colorado Right to Life’s president and CEO, said that Planned Parenthood’s move to a building on the same campus as its main abortion center shows how it is using the law to target abortion providers. “In other words, (Planned

NEWSLETTER Faulkner Anecdotes :: A Bunch Of Forgotten Stories From The Letters Of William Faulkner Email Address: First Name: What's your email address? Advertisement Advertisement Whichever of his novels you're reading, you can be sure that William Faulkner was a writer who knew how to have a good time. Here are a few anecdotes from the letters of the great man. I've known several people in my time, and by and large the saying is true: "A woman will often give herself away as much by her speech as she will by her actions." But here's a woman who seems to have had no such inhibitions. She addresses herself as "Miss Mildred" in one letter to her sister, while in another letter to her lover she addresses herself as "Mistress Eunice." In no less than five letters, she's concerned with the following: I don't know what was in my mind to say [in the first letter], but I suppose that in my mind I was seeing two of the most important events of my life: my first kiss and my first affair. It seems to me that I should have said, "I was seeing the first evidence I had seen that you, the one person I have loved all my life, are to me a stranger, unknown, a person unknown, a person all my life, unknown."... I should have said, "I am a stranger to you, unknown, as I was on the day we first met, a stranger to you now, as you must be to me."... [In the third letter] I was very calm and very sad. I felt that this day had crushed all possibilities of the future. I was sad.... My thoughts went to Eunice. I could see no hope. And I felt a pity for her. I could only think of her as some wall against me, I could only think of her as I had remembered her the night before, as a dark figure I could see out of the window.... But now she was dead. She was as dead as if she had never been. I didn't understand. I didn't understand, and I was angry with myself and angry with you and angry with the world that had given you to me and that had given me to you, and angry with myself. I raged at you as well as against
